(USA TODAY) - One man made history recently as the first amputee male model to walk down the runway at New York Fashion Week.

Jack Eyers, personal trainer and model, was part of the FTL MODA presentation on Feb. 15 at Mercedes Benz Fashion Week.

MODA collaborated with Fondazione Vertical, which featured disabled models across the world.

"To be the first male amputee model on a New York Fashion Week runway feels amazing," he told Caters News. "I just want to show that having a disability doesn't hold you back."

Eyers has been nominated for Men's Health Man of the Year .
