

First amputee male model walks in N.Y. Fashion Week

February 19, 2015 by rubyburns2014 / Leave a comment

So fashion week is in full swing – currently at New York, and the Kardashian/Yeezy clan seem to still be making headlines. I have also been made completely jealous by watching the whole thing on my snapchat feed. Although i enjoyed seeing some behind the scenes which was cool. However there was something which caught my eye today which was the FTL MODA presentation on Feb. 15 at Mercedes Benz Fashion Week. The show consisted of disabled models using wheelchairs etc and also one man, Jack Evers who is a personal trainer and model with an amputated leg.

In other NYFW news, there was the loud and proud Jeremy Scott whos style was rather clown/circus esque. His is not my cup of tea.. I am more of a “wear neutral colours and hide in a corner” kind of gal.

There was also Tommy Hilfiger who created a football field to showcase his new line which I thought was a great look but the clothes needed something as triumphant as that to make them look a little more interesting. On their own I don't think I would have given a second glance! Although saying that, I did like this jumper.

I think my favourites of the New York show were Michael Kors and Vera Wang. Michael for his heavenly tailoring and long pointy collars.